Compulsory REVISION comments	It is well appreciated that a waste product could be a vital source of antidiabetic therapy. The work has made some contributions on the relevance of Persea americana in the management of diabetes mellitus. There are some concerns however: The rats per group employed in the study are very few. Again the antidiabetic activity was evaluated only four times within a 21 day test period. Also, Only one dose level of the extract was investigated and no positive control was employed in the study. Finally, no phytochemical studies or GCMS analysis was carried out to determine the potential classes of compounds present in the peel. The design of this study was not well-articulated.
Minor REVISION comments	There are a number of grammatical errors in the write-up.
Optional/General comments
