Compulsory REVISION comments	Abstract: Should focus on the uniqueness of three case studies and highlight how they have potentially contributed to the conservation science, practice and policy, based on the relevant temporal and spatial scales. Methodologically, it is necessary to explain how the author(s) have shortlisted the three case studies as most potential ones i.e. why latitudinal selection has been made, i.e. Nepal, India and Sri Lanka instead of longitudinal one. Is it a random selection? A suitable flow chart of the experimental analytical method may be included.
