| Optional/General comments | I enjoyed reading this paper, which has a number of noteworthy strengths. Understanding the argument for pre-school and general education schools' autonomy as a condition to improve the overall quality of the learner's experience is a really important topic. The introduction is clear and the following argument equally clear. The objective of the theoretical discussion is well defined, and the argument is meaningful, critical, and well-founded. Overall, the manuscript is a valuable contribution to the literature. | |
