| Compulsory REVISION comments | This paper articulated the two types of psychological aspects of personalities revealed by two prominent drama plays. Both texts explore the virulent sexuality and aggressive violence of two black men on two white women in these plays. The methodology adopted in the analysis is an interpretative, comparative and contrastive one. This paper finally concludes that the domestic violence is one of the discomfoting and shameful phenomena that continue to be sporadically spilt in the post-modernist era in the British society in particular, and the world in general. | |
