

Editor's Comment:

The authors identified a new source of uricase enzyme from Bacillus subtilis for the preparation of uric acid diagnostic tests. From this point of view, work is interesting and can be important in health care. However, I agree with the opinion of the reviewers that some of the information on the importance of uric acid does not fit the nature of the work. Of course, the justification of the purpose of the research is recommended, however, it must be within the appropriate limits and must not override the purpose of the research. The work should be published, but after it has been edited, updated, and extended with literature adequate to the title of the work.
