

Editor's Comment:

After I checked the manuscript, I give some comments as follows :

If this article is to be published in the Asian Journal of Research in Crop Science, there are several things that must be corrected, namely:

1. The background to this topic is unclear and not sharp, especially regarding the dangers of the Bactrocera zonata pest to fruit plants. This needs to be supported by data from the results of previous research. The background should also contain an explanation of the importance of this topic.
2. The manuscript must be adapted to the template in this journal.
3. Avoid typing errors.
4. References that support the topics discussed are still very minimal. A review article must be supported by more than 50 references.
5. Statements in the conclusion should not contain references.
