Yes, because it will increase the attention on the proper use of one of the commonly used drugs with serious side effects 2. It is better to be (Fentanyl intoxication in an eight years old child after application of 75 µg/h transdermal patch: A case report) 3. Yes, apart from missing the writing the main conclusion in the introduction 4. the subsections are proper but the structure needs some rearrangements, the author needs to mention the information of the pharmacodynamics and kinetics and the side effects and antidote of fentanyl in the sector of introduction(which are all mentioned by the author in the sector of discussion) so it is better to remove these information from discussion and write it again in the introduction with the proper order and changing the reference numbering which will be affected by this rearrangements , something else the author does not mention patient consent which is very important to be mentioned 5. Yes, only one thing must be changed that the author mention in the 3rd line after introduction that the fentanyl patch is prescribed for management of acute and chronic pain and this not approved because it is used for chronic pain only 6. The references are sufficient but only two of ten references with clear date of publication and the author must write that | |
