Optional/General comments	The article has an excellent methodology, and the strength of the number of participating subjects is very adequate for a study of these characteristics, marking a point of excellence and reliability in research. It is very well documented with bibliography and very current references, and the research has a very useful transfer to reality and can be extended to numerous sports disciplines, with which the authors must be congratulated for the progress produced in this problem, marking a point of turning point in the approach to this type of injury, which is so frequent and detrimental in the development of the sports career of many elite athletes. The rehabilitation plan can be a springboard for professional level athletes who aim to recover quickly after a rotator cuff injury. The contribution of the authors that rotator cuff injury can be prevented in the initial levels is also very remarkable if it is correctly diagnosed and an adequate rehabilitation plan can promote the recovery process. Proper technical guidelines and awareness can also improve muscle performance and prevent recurrence of injury in athletes. The only correction that this excellent work needs is to find and date the following reference: Gill, S. A., Zahid, O., Abdullah, U., Shaheen, M., Naseer, A., Butt, Z. I., and Arslan , M., which does not appear in the bibliography
