Optional/General comments	I know very well that potassium is very important for plants, but there is a system of elements that work together, namely potassium, nitrogen, and phosphorus. This made me think why, after mentioning the importance of potassium, researchers did not try to draw attention to other elements. It is also assumed that there is a relationship between potassium and sodium, which is an important relationship where we talk about it
