Optional/General comments	I consider it to be of interest, but it is not within the standards of magazine publication, since the development of a monograph with field work is impressive. It is suggested: 1. Have a publication structure in a scientific journal (it is an investigation) Summary, Introduction, Objective, Methodology, Results, Discussion, and Conclusions. Considering that in methods you must describe all the tools used that support the results. For example, the PAER does not explain with what tool the data reported in the tables was obtained; In turn, any tool used must have its corresponding validation appointment.
