The research investigated parameters including plant height, leaf count, leaf length, weight, and crop yield. The results indicate slight variations in the spatial and temporal influencing factors. However, the study has limited outcomes, as it was conducted on nine treatment combinations with three plant spacings. The differences in planting times were relatively short, with only a one-week interval between three experiments conducted in November. The suggested revision for the article title is as follows: "Effect of Spacing and Time on Growth and Yield of Chinese Cabbage (Brassica rapa): A Case Study Under Humid Subtropical Climatic Conditions". Yes Yes Yes Yes
