

Editor's Comment:

This paper discusses the religious diversity in Ghana, based on quotations from scripture and some local observations. It is worth publishing as a case study. However, in order for the paper to make it through peer review, there needs to be an explanation of how the paper was or was not changed in response to the comments given by the reviewers; the authors just responded OKAY or NOTED in response to the comments given by the five reviewers, and do not explain how the manuscript was changed in any specific way. The editor cannot make a judgment because there is no explanation as to how the manuscript was changed. Explanations from the authors are needed. For example, the added or revised parts should be put in red. In particular, Har makes the following comment. An explanation is needed as to how this comment was addressed.

1. No, the abstract does not yet clearly reveal the results and contributions of the study.
2. Not yet: I think the author has not yet explained the method used, and the author has not yet included research limitations that provide future research opportunities.
