

Editor's Comment:

Following a detailed evaluation of all documents related to the manuscript, I must return the manuscript to the authors for major and serious correction.

1. The manuscript represents a poor scientific level. The effect of gibberellins and cytokinins on many plant species is already well-known and described in the literature, and the implementation of such research is rather aimless. Thus, the authors must clearly state the purpose of the research. References are very old and such an article definitely will be not interesting either to scientists or breeders. The literature must be substantially updated.
2. The manuscript is prepared not following the Journal requirements and contains many mistakes. Some of them I have marked in the text, especially on the first page. Currently, the manuscript can be considered only as a kind of a draft of a manuscript.
3. Although both reviewers had rather minor suggestions for the text, the authors only slightly corrected the text and did not provide any responses to the reviewers' points. The authors should treat reviewers' suggestions and requirements with more respect.

My decision is: Return to the authors for major and serious revision.
