It provides valuable insights into the relationship between female literacy and juvenile sex ratios, which can inform policy decisions and educational initiatives in similar regions. The title accurately reflects the content and scope of the article. The abstract is comprehensive and provides a clear overview of the study's objectives, methodology, key findings, and conclusions. The subsections and structure of the manuscript are appropriate. The manuscript appears to be scientifically correct. The methods used for data analysis, including the Pearson correlation coefficient, are appropriate for the study. The results are clearly presented, and the conclusions are logically derived from the findings. The references are sufficient and include recent studies relevant to the topic. The manuscript cites various sources from 2014 to 2023, which are pertinent to the analysis of female literacy and sex ratios. Aspects to improve <ol style="list-style-type: none"> Ensure the manuscript undergoes thorough proofreading to correct any grammatical errors and improve sentence structure. Include more recent studies to support the discussion and findings. Add a subsection discussing the potential policy implications of the study's findings. Consider integrating qualitative data or case studies to provide a more comprehensive understanding of the issues discussed.
Minor REVISION comments <ol style="list-style-type: none"> Is language/English quality of the article suitable for scholarly communications? 	The language and English quality of the article are generally suitable for scholarly communication. However, minor grammatical corrections and improvements in sentence structure could enhance readability.
Optional/General comments	Accept with minor revision. The study could be strengthened by including a discussion on potential policy implications of the findings. Additionally, integrating qualitative data or case studies from the region could provide more depth to the analysis.
