

Editor's Comment:

The article can be published after being edited in line with the suggestions.

- It would be better to change the first two lines in the Conclusion section as follows. Sentence should not be started with "Therefore".

“According to the results of the study, it was found that the use of the spreading genotype with 45 kg N/ha fertilizer gave the best results for the productivity of groundnut in the northeast of Afghanistan.”

- Very long sentences are used in both the abstract and other parts of the article, and it is unclear where the sentence begins and ends. Therefore, the language of the article should be reviewed by someone who is fluent in English, or at least Google Translate should be used.

Although the authors have prepared the reference list in line with the referee's recommendation, the list should be reviewed in line with the journal's reference writing recommendations.

Editor's Details:

Prof. Ahmet Esen Çelen
Ege University, Turkey.