This can happen due to globalization, political, socio-cultural, economic, technological, policy and public participation factors. These factors are often interrelated and complex, and changes in one area can affect the dynamics of the entire media at large. In the introduction, these factors should be explained so readers understand better. If Tanzania adheres to a republican/democratic system, it is necessary to explain the role and function of mass media/journalism as government control. If indeed the political conditions in Tanzania are that the government has hegemonized private mass media, it is necessary to explain the leading cause. In the theoretical framework, it needs to be emphasized to become a theoretical framework according to the title "From Development Communication to Watchdog Journalism". If the function of the media/press in Tanzania shifts from development communication to watchdog journalism, is this a setback? Or are there new findings that deviate from general theory regarding the function of the press/journalism as a support for democracy?

	It is best if the Discussion section answers the research question. It is also necessary to refer to related research and dialogue with the findings to clarify the novelty of this research. References should use a reference management application. It needs to be updated, primarily referring to the latest published literature, namely 2023-2024, because it has yet to be created, and the references are still from old literature.
