Optional/General comments	The discourse on multicultural education is a very relevant topic in contemporary societies, particularly in countries with diverse ethnic, religious and cultural backgrounds. A moderate approach to religion involves a collective commitment to maintaining a balance. This requires that all members of society, regardless of their ethnic, cultural, religious or political background, listen to and learn from each other and develop the skills to manage and resolve their differences. The author must be congratulated for making known these moderate and positive aspects of educational models derived from the Islamic system, favoring moderate positions, communication and respect. The research data indicate that the implications of multicultural Islamic religious education on objective consciousness in the pesantros have implications for moderate religious views.
