For the study the author conducted a semi-structured interview guide to assess puerperal mothers' knowledge on NNJ. A purposive sampling technique was used to select 15 mothers attending health services at the Tamale West Hospital with newborns sick of NNJ. About the study the author conclude that the health education should be intensified at the various units of the hospital to correct cultural and religious practices and improve caregivers and mothers understanding about NNJ. The author has made a wide study on this topic which may be useful for society to reduce NNJ. References are recent and title is also suit the manuscript. The paper can be published.
