Publication in Asian Research Journal of Arts & Social Sciences

The paper examines how herdsmen and farmers' conflicts in Anambra state have affected national development in Nigeria. It uses descriptive survey design and Questionnaire as instrument for data collection. The study found that herdsmen and farmers' conflicts in Anambra state have some negative consequences. Nigeria cannot achieve national development in the face of the recurring herdsmen and farmers' conflicts in the state. The study recommended the need for the state government to devise strategies for effective implementation of its Livestock Open Grazing Prohibition, Ranches Establishment Law 2021 and Federal Government's proactive intervention in ending the conflicts.

The article is an interesting document which analyzes national security dimension out of the conflicts in the two groups. All the editorial inputs given by the reviewers are meticulously worked out. It is a well documented paper with correct use of language, available references put in place, objective, methodology, hypothesis neatly worked out and finally drawn evidence based conclusion and recommendations.

The paper may be published in ARJASS.
