

Editor's Comment:

The manuscript titled 'A Case Report on 2 years Child: Hirschprung's Disease' contains a case report. In line with the original article and referee suggestions, the manuscripts revised by the authors were reviewed, but it was seen that most of the referees' suggestions were not fulfilled and some questions were left unanswered. Each question of the referees should be answered in detail and the answers should be expressed in detail in the article. Accordingly, the article needs to be rewritten in terms of both grammar and spelling. Also, clinically important answers should be given to the questions asked by the referees. On the other hand, when presenting case reports in the literature, a detailed written explanation of the case is also included in the article. In this article presented, the patient's findings are presented in tables one after the other and no cite is made to the tables in the text. So unfortunately, I am of the opinion that the article cannot be accepted as this way and that it would be appropriate to rewrite the article and upload it to the journal and re-evaluate it.
