Author/s should add a section on review of literature stating that why is the present study important and what addition it made to the existing literature. 2. Sample profile is clearly given in the article. Here, socio-economic characteristics of the sample beneficiaries are also equally important to understand the changing scenario. Moreover, land size, area under cultivation, cropping pattern, etc should be discussed in detail to understand the change. 3. Though the article is intended to study the income and employment, these concepts were not clearly quantified in the article. Changes in monetary income and employment days should be taken for evaluation. 4. There is scope for application of different statistical tools to evaluate the impact of FFP on beneficiary's employment and income generation. 5. Authors should use standard farmers classification (marginal, small, medium and large) given by the Agriculture census, Government of India. 6.
