The study used FAO's classification of food items in to 12 categories but used only eight to determine the Sampson Index of Dietary Diversity. What are the other four items of food? Why they were ignored? What policy conclusions could be drawn to increase the rural households' range of food items Income was a major factor influencing the households' dietary pattern. What policies could be implemented to increase income of rural households. Does this study suggest for price decrease of items supplied through PDS to the rural households, than in urban areas, to increase their consumption.
Minor REVISION comments	-----
Optional/General comments	It is a good study useful to the planners to implement the policies and programmes to decrease rural-urban differences.
