Compulsory REVISION comments	This article mainly describes in silico structural and finding inhibitor compound for the secreted glycoprotein of Reston ebolavirus (strain Philippines-96). Understanding the role each viral protein plays in disease progression may enhance development of counter measures of which therapeutics. Because several human infections were investigated among personnel who were exposed to Ebola Reston-infected monkeys or pigs, finding of this study can be considered as a step forward in preparedness to tackle Reston Ebola infection in human.
