Compulsory REVISION comments	Systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) is one of the most common autoimmune diseases. more than 90 medications from more than 10 drug classes have been implicated in causing lupus. Authors conducted an analytical cross-sectional study at Universities, hospitals, malls (from general population) KSA from June 2021 until October 2021. Prevalence study will be carried to test the questionnaire if easily understood and the response of the participants. In this paper, the authors investigate and report on what causes autoimmune diseases. The above can be evaluated as a certain level. However, there are many points that need to be pointed out. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) Too many spelling mistakes. 2) There are numerous parts of English that are not correct. 3) Many of the words are colloquial rather than the wording used in writing. 4) It is not well organized. In general, the order is Introduction, Materials and methods, Results, and Discussion. e.g.) Keywords: ...7. Rheumatic fever 5) There is no Table or Figure, making the contents very difficult to understand. It should be easier for readers to understand. 6) After all, I did not know what risk factors could cause autoimmune diseases such as SLE. 7) Overall, it is difficult to understand what you are trying to describe. At least the above points should be corrected or amended.
Minor REVISION comments	There are many English sentences and spelling mistakes that need to be corrected.
Optional/General comments	The fact that they are investigating and reporting on what causes autoimmune diseases is commendable on some level, but I still think the Review needs to be better based on the above points.
